Factors that contributed in the Rise of the Novel:

1. The Decline of Drama:

The rise of the Novel in the early stage of the 18th Century was greatly affected by the decline of drama. Novels pacified the interest of middle class people. The public needed reality and drama was thus no longer a social force because of the Licensing Act of 1737. This act was passed to control and censor what was said against the government through theatres. Henry Fielding, great novelist of the age, in his play His Historical Register of the Year 1736, denounced the contemporary politics and society. As a result, Walpole's government introduced the act. This played a huge role in the decline of drama and rise of the novel.

JANE EYRE
CHARLOTTE BRONTE

Jane Eyre

Pride and Prejudice and 19th century marriage

In the 19th century, the area of literature put a great emphasis on the concept of marriage as a social institution. In this century domestic fiction displays a great shift in marriage from an aristocratic institution to a socially accepted institution that identifies the values of the individual woman while restricting her to the domestic sphere. Pride and Prejudice by Jane Austen highlights the change in marriage from an institution set up by the aging rules of an aristocratic community to an institution the value of an individual woman.

Jane Austen is one of the authors who came to life in 1775 and published Pride and Prejudice in 1813. Jane Austen was one of the novelists in England whose writings serviced in English literature and the women of the Victorian age. This novel shows different aspects of marriage in the Victorian age.
