Brief Description of the Event: The department of Political Science organised an Experiential Learning Programme for the Honours students of Semester 6 and Semester 4 of the department. The speaker was Jita Ghosh Chowdhury, a 2023 West Bengal State University 2nd rank holder and an ex- student of the department, currently pursuing M.A from Rabindra Bharati University. She delivered a lecture on Hegel's Concept of Civil Society and State. The session, where faculty members were also present, was very interactive.

Programme Outcome: The Experiential Learning session broadened the academic horizon of the students, as they actively participated in the engaging experiential learning session on Hegel's concept of Civil Society and State. Through an interactive discussion with the speaker, the students explored the dialectical relationship between civil society and the state. The session enabled students to grasp Hegel's philosophical ideas and their relevance to modern political structures. By analysing real-world examples, they developed a deeper understanding of the complex dynamics between civil society, state institutions, and individual freedom.
