Brief Description:

The Department of Philosophy conducted a Parampara Class on 25th July 2025 as part of its ongoing initiative to strengthen student-alumni engagement and enhance academic enrichment. Arifa Khatun, an accomplished ex-student of the department, conducted an engaging session for Semester IV students on foundational ethical concepts.

The session began promptly at 11:15 AM in Room No. 8 with an introduction. Arifa Khatun initiated the discussion by distinguishing between moral, non-moral, and immoral actions, providing relatable examples for better understanding. She then introduced the three main branches of ethics—Normative Ethics, Meta Ethics, and Applied Ethics—explaining their significance and scope with clarity and depth. She also demonstrated by a power point presentation, which was very effective to illustrate key ideas.

Programme Outcome:

- Students gained conceptual clarity on core ethical terms and distinctions.
- The interactive nature of the session encouraged student participation and questions.
- The speaker effectively bridged academic theory with real-life ethical concerns.
- The session fostered a sense of continuity and inspiration among current students through alumni involvement.

The session was well-received and concluded with a vote of thanks. Students expressed appreciation for the practical insights and the opportunity to learn from an experienced alumnus.
